You will be asked to provide a summary of your complaint identifying (if possible) the issues involved. For example, an issue with fees, delays in response, the advice given.

Generally, the firm would communicate with you in writing. However, once the Client Relations Manager has considered the complaint and provided you with a substantive response, any further communication can be arranged and agreed with you, such as by phone, in person or in writing.

The complaint may be upheld in whole or part or may be rejected in whole or in part. This will be set out in writing to you.
